A second examination of the "Circulars of Information of the Bureau of Education No. 2 for 1874," enables us to supplement our former article with some import ant statements and suggestions in which we hope our public school teachers and all citizens interested in the public schools of the State will be interested.

The legislature of Massachusetts, moved thereto by the persistent efforts of a few cultured and public-spirited citizens who realized the imperative need and de- COMMISSIONER OF DEEDS & NOIARY PUBLIC mand for such training in the public schools passed an act in 1870, making drawing one of the studies of the public schools and also making the establishment of free drawing-classes for adults obligatory upon They said while gath'ring evergreen, I'd been all towns and cities containing over ten thousand inhabitants. In pursuance of this law, Mr. Walter Smith, " Art-master, London," was invited to come from England and introduce the new study into the schools of the city and of the Commonwealth. He was appointed State-director nent boarders of art-education, and general supervisor of art in the Boston schools." A State Normal Art School was established, the special purpose of which is to train teachers of drawing and the arts of design. This is the first institution of the U. kind established in this country. The interest felt is shown by the fact that 500 city school teachers attended these drawing classes in Boston in 1872 and 620 in

There are three sections of the public to be educated children, adult artizans, and the public generally, who come under neither of the first two divisions. How this has been provided for in most of the European states I may here shortly describe. For children, elementary drawing is taught as a part of general education in most of the schools and classes have been established in almost all towns or populous villages; and for the general public, museums, galleries of art, and courses of public lectures on feb22-1y art-subjects are becoming general. Upon the comparative value of these several means there may be and is much difference of opinion, but upon one point there is a general agreement, viz, that to make na
